

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

THE KENT COUNTY ARCHÆOLOGICAL SOCIETY provided invaluable help in the project. On Saturday, August 4, 1990, in spite of the devastating heat, they worked all day to sink five meter-square tests into Simon's Savannah. Thanks to their efforts, the survey of Simon's Savannah was elevated from identification [Phase I] to interpretation [Phase II].

Edward Voshell, who cultivates the Ford farm, and John Donato, supervisor of the physical plant at DelTech, were surprisingly patient in their cooperation throughout the years of the project. Steve Vess of DelDOT assisted the project immeasurably when he turned over the bifurcate point he found at Blueberry Hill.

For Heite Consulting, fieldwork assistance was provided by Cherie Clark, Sam Cammisa, and George Keeler.

Wayne Randolph of Colonial Williamsburg Foundation was responsible for leading the authors into the literature of plows and plowscars. Without his help, this dimension of the study would have been nonexistent. For the sections on agricultural history, including the cover illustration, the staff of the Delaware Agricultural Museum patiently provided help, library resources, access to collections, and advice.
